

Ask an Expert: Can We Fire an Employee for Sharing His Pay Increase with Co-Workers?

Workers are often protected when discussing salaries, even if doing so damages morale. Under the National Labor Relations Act, employers are prohibited from taking adverse action against employees who participate in a “protected concerted activity.

Resource: SHRM Society for Human Resource Management